

Dear daughter,

I am writing this letter in 2025. You are five years old now. You will read this in 2035, when you are fifteen. The world may be very different then.

You were born in 2020, a year that changed many things. Since then, life has continued to move fast. Today, in 2025, we see new technology, stronger AI, climate problems, and new ways of learning and working. Some changes are exciting. Some changes are worrying.

In 2035, you may study with digital tools, smart devices, or mixed-reality classrooms. You may see more electric cars, clean energy, and new kinds of jobs. You may work with AI every day. I hope these things help you live safely and happily.

But the future also has challenges.

The weather may be more extreme. Some people may lose jobs because of technology. The internet may bring stress or confusion. Life may feel busy or fast, and you may sometimes feel lost or unsure. That is normal. Everyone feels this way sometimes.

Here is what I hope for you:

Stay curious. Ask questions.

Be kind. Care for people and the planet.

Use technology wisely. Do not let it control you.

Learn new things, but also rest when you need to.

Trust yourself. You are stronger than you think.

When you read this in 2035, I hope you see how much I care about you. The future will have both good and bad moments, but you do not face them alone. I believe in your heart, your mind, and your courage.

With love,

Chen

2025